Did you know?

Did you know that Volkswagen purchased Rolls Royce Motor Company without realizing that they did not own Rolls Royce name and its trademark, and that name and trademark was owned by BMW, a direct competitor to Volkswagen?

So, VW purchased all rights to manufacture Rolls Royce car along with the Rolls Royce factory and staff in Crewe, UK, but did not have any rights to brand it with the same name.

Neither they had any engines for its car as BMW was producing engines for Rolls Royce; since Rolls Royce factory in Crewe was manufacturing both Rolls Royce and Bentley cars.

Eventually, after lot of twist and turns, BMW finally became Rolls Royce owner in 2003 and is now its exclusive manufacturer. VW is now sole manufacturer of Bentley cars.

Phool.co an Indian Institute of Technology (IIT) Kanpur-backed biomaterial startup has developed 'fleather'—bio-degradable vegan leather made from discarded temple flowers.

Made from discarded flowers, fleather will not only bring relief to animal activists but also solve the problem of floral waste. Check out https://phool.co/ for the products

Intrigued by the formation of a leather-like white layer on unused piles of flowers, Phool.co's R&D team discovered the growth of a micro-organism which used flower petals as a nutritional source
